In Casa Dos Irenes, light becomes an integral part of the architecture, enhancing the identity of the spaces. Designed by Número 26, the project redefines a home originally built between the 1940s and 1950s through a measured balance between past and present, where original features and new insertions coexist naturally.

Spread across 85 square metres, the apartment preserves part of its original structure while reinterpreting it in a contemporary way, restoring a central role to the shared living areas. In this context, Artemide lighting engages in a dialogue with the architecture, helping to create an elegant and timeless atmosphere.
