The new Banca di Bologna branch in Imola takes shape through a dialogue between architecture, light and materials, with a design that reinterprets the existing spaces while preserving their identity.

In this context, Artemide products help create an open and welcoming environment, where transparency and visual continuity foster a new relationship between the banking institution and the city.

Artemide

Helgoland, Funivia and A.24 Wall integrate seamlessly into the architecture, enhancing its geometries and the quality of its materials. Light follows the spatial composition, highlighting continuous surfaces, glass partitions and structural elements that define the connection between the different levels.

The project reflects an approach in which light becomes an integral part of the architectural experience, contributing to the creation of functional, contemporary spaces designed around people's well-being.
